

Olga Sorokina, Business Development Director
Russian Microfinance Center, Moscow, Russian Federation

Olga Sorokina has graduated from the State University Higher School of Economics (Moscow). After completing a bachelor's degree in economics, she obtained a master's degree in financial economics in the International College of Economics and Finance, National Research University Higher School of Economics (Moscow).

Since 2009 she has worked in research, studying different aspects of Russian financial services, especially services for small businesses and microfinance. Now she is a Business Development Director of the Russian Microfinance Center (RMC). She actively participates in promotion of all-inclusive financial services, developing microfinance programs improving access of unbanked population and small business to the financial services, and increasing transparency of microfinance market.